Before defending the dissertation, the candidate undergoes an oral examination on the origins, history and contemporary status of the major area in which the dissertation topic lies. At least one month before submitting the written dissertation, the candidate presents a list of five topics with bibliographies indicative of familiarity with the major area to the dissertation committee. The dissertation director and readers collaborate with the candidate in drafting questions for the lectio, which are submitted together with their respective bibliographies to the Ecclesiastical Degrees Committee Chair and the Dean for final review.
